Surrogate Claims Contract Violates Her Constitutional Rights

A surrogacy arrangement made headline news recently when the surrogate refused to abort one of the triplets she was carrying. According to the surrogacy contract she signed, the intended father could “selectively reduce” the number of fetuses to the number of his choosing. When he made the decision to do so, the woman not only refused, she filed a lawsuit claiming California surrogate law is unconstitutional. ... Continue reading

Katie, our Bulldog, Spreads Good Cheer

In our last newsletter, we shared with you how Katie, our resident Bulldog, visits patients at a clinic down the hall from our firm. While patients are receiving treatment for severe ailments, Katie sits with them to put a smile on their face. Her presence lifts the patients' spirits and aids in their healing process. As you can see in the photo, Katie is a loving lap dog who provides comfort to people who really need a bright spot in their day.

Now, that's good medicine.

Florida Alimony Reform Update

Alimony reform bills are making their way through the Florida legislature, but as of this week, the leading Senate legislation, SB 668, may hit a roadblock. In addition to modifying ways alimony is calculated and distributed, this bill includes child time-sharing language. That is the component that is currently stalling this bill's momentum.

As we recently wrote in our blog, the Senate bill includes measures to end ... Continue reading
